

Figure 1 sets out the derogations to date in tabular form. Where the derogated provisions were not specified in the letter notifying derogation but are apparent from the attached laws, this is indicated by '(in Decree)'; where this does not appear, the letter itself includes the detail. For simplicity and consistency, where a notification letter specifies the end dates of relevant laws or a state of emergency, this is taken as the projected end of the derogation (even where a state says it will send a further notification when the derogation ends).

Figure 1

* Argentina's first letter singles out its border controls, and recitals 5-7 of Decree 313/2020 can be read as implying that it is these measures that require suspension whereas other measures (such as internal movement restrictions) can be justified as ordinary restrictions. But this is unclear, and it also includes details on its state of emergency and the relevant Decrees, leaving it unclear whether those measures require derogation.

** Bolivia's third letter specifically refers to the ordinary restriction provisions of these articles (arts. 7(2), 16(2) and 22(3)), leaving it unclear whether the intention is to suspend or not. Similarly, Chile, the Dominican Republic and Guatemala's letters refer to restrictions (rather than suspensions) of the relevant articles.

*** Guatemala's second letter states that 'the measures restricting articles 13, 15 and 22 [ACHR] continue in force' and the attached decree refers to no new measures. However, this may be a mistake: the first and third notifications in fact only refer to articles 15 and 22, and the second letter uses identical language to the others ('which concern the freedom of assembly and movement').

**** Honduras' first notification's first attached Decree refers to earlier measures in force from 16-21 March which suspended additional constitutional rights (art. 13 and further aspects of art.7 ACHR) to those suspended from 21 March onwards. The second notification includes its only decree to refer to international human rights; interestingly, it cites arts 11 and 13 ACHR (and arts 4, 17 and 19 ICCPR) in respect of restrictions on the dissemination of photographs, interviews or personal data of Coronavirus victims without their express consent.
